About Al-Mansour University College

Al-Mansour University College is one of the private academic institutions of higher education of public interest. It was established in 1988 in Baghdad by the Iraqi Association for Libraries and Information, and studies began in it on 10/1/1988.

The college has put at the forefront of its priorities keeping pace with the current and future developments of the era, including ensuring its leadership among Iraqi private universities.

The college adopts the regulations and instructions issued by the Iraqi Ministry of Higher Education and Scientific Research and seeks to prepare students academically and technically to provide them with scientific knowledge and applied experiences and develop their skills. The Arab Scientific Research Councils in addition to the International Association for the Advancement of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB) also have a lot of memorandums of scientific and cultural cooperation with solid international institutions and universities, led by the University of London, the University of Westminster, the University of Crinch, the University of Birmingham, the University of Huddersfield and a number of Arab universities.
