Quizzes help you make money

You might not think the phrase "what glasses match your personality" is that powerful, but it actually helped an online eyewear company make over $1 million in just 6 months. This simple personality quiz asked things like "What is your favorite decade?" "Who is your celebrity icon?", presented as clickable images. People who took the quiz were then invited to sign up for the company's newsletter and later, many converted to customers.

Quizzes are highly shareable

Quizzes are a powerful marketing tool that few brands are taking advantage of. On BuzzFeed alone, quizzes can generate over 20 million views. They have tons of reach from social sharing as well as organic search, which is unheard of for most other forms of marketing. Quizzes also produce metrics that matter, helping engage audiences and interactions with your brand.

Quizzes create test-enhanced learning

Robert Bjork, a research psychologist specializing in memory and recall, illustrated the power of quizzes with two groups of students. Group A was given a lesson 4 times. Group B was given the lesson once and then quizzed on it 3 times. And what do you know? Group B outperformed Group A by 50%. This is because retrieving memories improves long term memory retention.

Quizzes inspire confidence

72% of students reported that quizzing made them less nervous during final exams. And 92% of students believed regular quizzing helped them learn. This shows that quizzes do not have to be high stakes or count towards final grades to be effective.
